To Pocket Guide

- Start capturing the memories early in your stay. Be sure to get your first Disney's PhotoPass photo taken in the first park you visit to mark the start of your vacation.
- For convenience and easy access, store your PhotoPass card in a clear plastic sleeve attached to a lanyard around your neck. No need to remove the card from the sleeve each time you would like to use it; it can be scanned right through the plastic.
- Guests with Magic Bands can just have their band scanned. Photos will be available to view their My Disney Experience account.
- Guests traveling together should link their My Disney Experience accounts through the "Trends" feature. This will allow all photos to be seen by everyone in the party.
- Disney Photopass photographers will take multiple poses at each location to ensure that you get a great variety. Let them help position your party and allow them to take the candid moments as well as the more traditional portrait-style shots. Once you get back home, try adding borders or character signatures to your photos. You can also crop your photos and save them to increase the total number of photos that will appear in your account.
- Don't leave your own camera behind. While PhotoPass photographers are usually available on main walkways and at character meet & greet areas, sometimes they are unavailable, especially on rainy days. Don't take chances and miss that "special moment." Photographers will also take a photo with your camera if you ask.
